Key Ideas

- Migration is a very topical issue and causes a lot of discussion and argument in our current world. By exploring migration in the past, we can see that it is not just a feature of modern times. It forms part of our past that stretches back to the earliest periods of history. The history of migration to Britain has fundamentally shaped the country in which we all live today.
- Some migration is caused by people feeling conflict - such as the movement of people from Poland in WWII.
- Some migration is based upon the aggressive acts of invasion and conflict with one group of people looking to invade new lands. Examples of this include the Roman invasion of Britain in 43 AD, the invasion by Saxons from the 5th Century, Viking invasions from 796 AD and the Normans in 1066 AD.
- Some migration has been driven by religious beliefs - such as the Jews who were fleeing religious persecution in Europe during the 19th & 20th centuries.
- Civilizations can be shaped and changed by the arrival of migrants. The history of Britain reflects this. A civilizations attitude towards immigrants can reflect its values and cultural outlook. Migration is caused by many different factors including invasion, settling new land, economic reasons and fleeing natural disasters or persecution.
